Thanks for asking. Haven't been following the settlement closely. But generally I think Bill, Microsoft, and the American public got screwed by somebody who doesn't get the big picture. What you've done has changed the world, daily, for the better, for the last how-many years. Somebody ought to be sucking your toe cheese and saying thank you minute-by-minute. Sorry for the setbacks. They are inevitable when you do something well. And with even a small understanding of reality I have come to accept that even if you're able to clear one don't-get-it person out of the way, there's always another right behind. So tread undaunted as best you can -- you are STILL performing an incredibly valuable service to the planet as you chart an extremely difficult journey for all of us. The way we earn a living will continue to change which affects the global economy which, unfortunately, still runs the world. I'm sure as the world shakes out the wrinkles we will all face more circumstances we don't know what to do with at first, but we made it before and we'll just keep working our way through the development of our minds and instincts. Oh, and remember the words on Henry Miller's tombstone: I outlasted the bastards! lol
